Facing west on Old Columbia Pike, this 3-story stone house is four bays wide, with doors in both interior bays. Built of granite blocks, it has double-hung 6/6 windows on the first two floors, and small 6-pane casement windows just below the eave line. The roof is metal, and there are interior brick chimneys in either gable end. A low stone wall surrounds the house, and three stone steps lead down to the street. All doors and windows have massive granite sills and lintels, and the corners of the building have granite quoins.

The rear facade has two 6-pane casement windows just below the eave line. Below this, in the northernmost bay, is one 6/6 sash window. An enclosed porch covers the two central bays, the northernmost of which has a door.
